Submerged Roman Cities.

Late explorations of the Italian coast near Pompeii have changed the opinion of antiquarians, says the New York Tribune. The submerged Roman ruins along the coast used to be regarded as foundation walls thrown out for sea baths, but it was made clear that they are the remains of noble mansions, and that they point to the time when the land on which they stood was far above the level of the sea. The shore is, in fact, strewn with the wreck of buried cities. Coast roads have vanished, ancient quarries have been flooded and the breakwaters of the harbors of classical story covered fathoms deep with water. A great submarine sea wall, with concrete piers 17 feet high, still protects the fragments. But neither the fragments nor the great sea wall have been visible in the light of day for 2,000 years.

NOT SUCCESSFUL IN HIGH ART.

Fence and House Painting Suggested for Unambitious Youth.

A well known art school in Brooklyn has been diligently but vainly trying for several months to make something of a certain young man who has neither a genius for art nor a talent for work. A few days ago the head of the school received a letter from the young man's father, a hard headed, successful business man, saying, among other pertinent things:

"I am afraid my son is not cut out for a great painter. I believe that if he had any latent ability you would have brought some of it to the surface by this time. But so far as I know he has thus far painted only one portrait and one landscape. The portrait, I hardly need tell you, is not so life-like that I has to be shaved every other day, though it is presumably that of a man old enough to raise a beard. The landscape is a little better. One feature in it, the fence, is pretty good—so good, indeed, it tempts me to think that, with the right experience, my son might in time become a fairly good journeyman fence painter, and possibly even arrive at last at the dignity of standing on a ladder and spreading the first coat on a house. Under these circumstances, unless you have a department for instruction in fence and house painting, I think it would be better for my son to try some other sort of school for awhile."

Thrown Out.

"And you say you lost your position by the great earthquake in San Francisco?" Inquired the kind lady.

"Yes, mum," replied Frayed Franklyn.

"What was your position?"

"I wuz asleep in a barn at de time, an'—Milwaukee Sentinel.

JUVENILE DEPRAVITY IN ITALY

Criminal Parents and Wretched Homes Chiefly to Blame.

Consul Brittain of Keil, Germany, furnishes some startling statistics on juvenile crime in Italy, taken from an article recently published and written by Lino Ferriani. He says that 80 per cent of the child criminals of Italy are manufactured by bad environment and inadequate education—in other words, by preventable causes; that 30 per cent of the criminals of the country are minors, and of these 85 per cent are thieves.

Prof. Ferriani protests against sentimental description, but pleads for scientific investigation. He has closely studied 500 boy prisoners between the ages of 11 and 1, and reports that more than half of them came from the most wretched homes, and over 200 had criminal parents. Very few had ever done any work, all were sexually corrupt, nearly all smoked, and many had a taste for alcohol.

As a proof of how little good is effected by mere instruction apart from moral training, he asserts that the best scholars were among the worst offenders. As an alternative to prison the author proposes agricultural colonies in districts where the air is bracing, with good food and outdoor work, kindly discipline, and the supervision of an experienced physician.

Marriage in the States.

Owing to the numerous and divergent divorce laws in America a curious state of things can easily exist. You may divorce your wife in Arizona. But as you travel in the same train with her to New York she is your wife still—now and then, and for an hour or two at a time. Unless you get the conductor of the train to call the state frontiers and read the local code, you cannot be certain whether you are bound or free.
